

What if scrubs could talk?

Many Australians cannot speak or speak well enough to be understood. This is particularly concerning in health settings. The Board of ISAAC Australia* has teamed up with health researchers from the University of Adelaide, UniSA and Flinders University in a study to see if health worker scrubs printed with communication symbols might improve communication between patients with disabilities and health workers.

We are seeking people with communication disability and their family/close supports and health professionals and AAC experts to answer this short SURVEY.

If you have questions or need help to access the survey please contact Dr B-J Dee-Price – email b-j.dee-price@adelaide.edu.au or phone 0434192392

Please click the link to participate

https://www.allcounted.com/s?did=kxn5jppn2xbxn&lang=en_US

The survey closes Friday 26th April 5pm SA time.

The survey has been approved by the Human Research Ethics Committee of Flinders University
Project ID: 6518

ISAAC Australia is a chapter of the International Society for Augmentative and Alternative Communication (ISAAC)*

